MAG MILE LIGHTS?

ALDERMAN SAYS IT'S NOT TIMES SQUARE, JUST GOOD BUSINESS

Chicago Tribune

They've got them in Times Square, Tokyo, too.

Under a measure pending in a City Council committee, some of Michigan Avenue's toniest shopping venues could end up sporting eye-catching jumbo signs.

Ald. Brendan Reilly (42nd) has introduced an ordinance that would allow centers of at least 300,000 square feet with at least 10 tenants to erect flashing signs. Based on those parameters, that could include Water Tower Place, The Shops at North Bridge and 900 North Michigan Shops.

The proposed ordinance, submitted late last month to the committee on Zoning, Landmarks and Building Standards, does not say how many signs per center could be erected, but it stipulates that the displays could not be larger than 1,000 square feet and must not be more than 80 feet off the ground. In addition, the images must be static for at least 20 minutes, and the retailer's name has to be as large as or larger than the product name advertised.

On Tuesday, Reilly moved to quell concerns that the Magnificent Mile would morph into a version of New York's Times Square.

"This ordinance does not allow for flashing lights, neon, video images, streaming or Flash video," Reilly said. The signs also would be equipped with dimmers so that if they were deemed too bright the lights could be softened, he said.

On Monday, a local preservationist group voiced concerns that the proposal would alter the elegance of the Magnificent Mile.

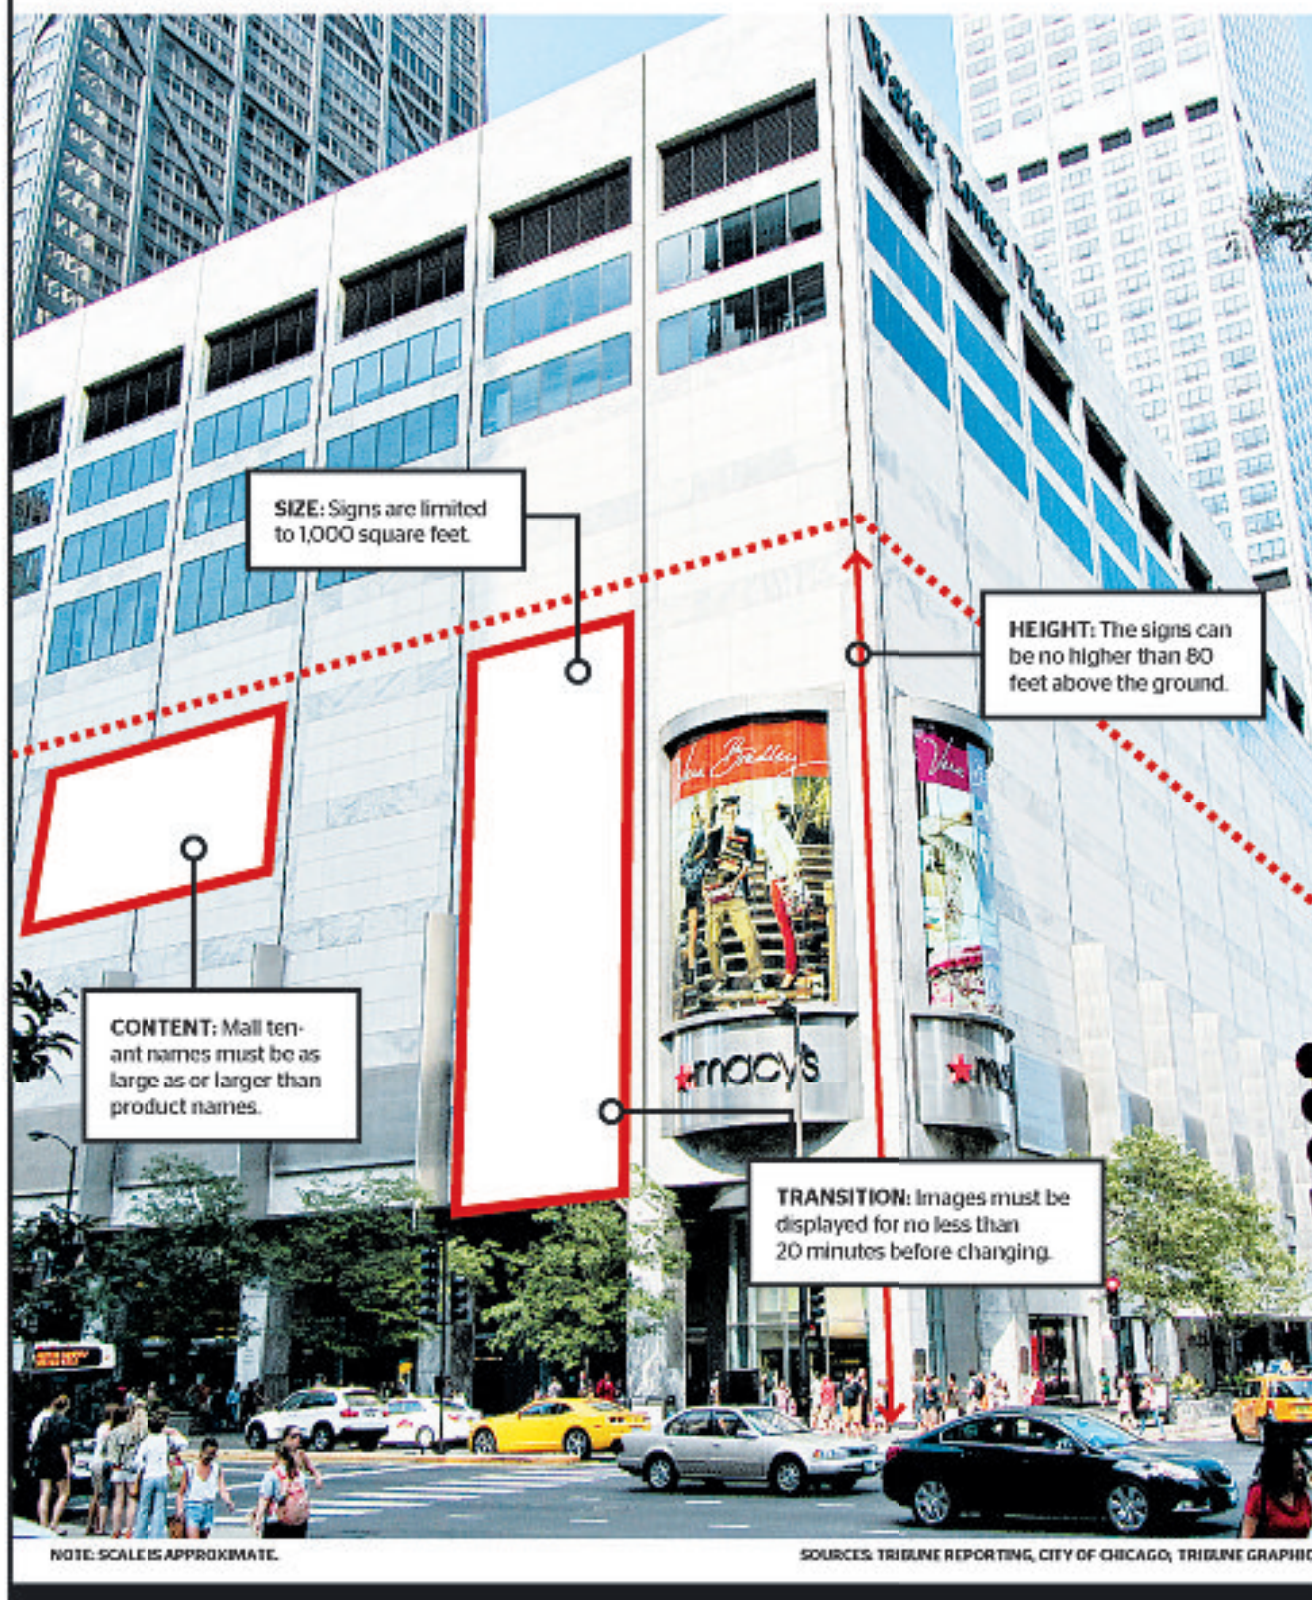

"This ordinance does not allow for the building owners to erect billboards on their facades obstructing their architecture," said Reilly, adding it "would not open up Michigan Avenue to becoming the next Times Square."

Reilly said the proposal would allow signage that keeps up with the latest technology and also better showcases what's inside the malls.

"This is intended to be a creative approach that takes advantage of new technology to help these tenants and mall owners without sacrificing the aesthetic of Michigan Avenue," he said.

FLASHY PROPOSAL

A proposed ordinance would allow shopping malls along the Magnificent Mile with at least 10 tenants and 300,000 square feet of retail space to install Jumbotron-style signs.

Humor never gets canned

As the national unemployment rate tops 8 percent, I sit here pantsless with no deadlines, eating ramen, playing "Words with Friends," watching YouTube videos and blogging. I imagine this is what heaven is like.

Don't hate.

My job as a copywriter was "eliminated" last month due to a "bad economy." So I got canned. Dismissed. Booted. Discharged.

God bless America.

After moping around the house for days, I began to realize that being laid off can be awesomely beneficial. I can make myself a big bowl of cereal, put on a robe and watch "Fight Club" six times. Like a boss.

I can track down who's missing from my Facebook friends list and flood the News Feed with updates such as, "I'm about to eat all the cheese samples at Whole Foods hahhaa!" Or, "I am sitting on the couch because I got laid off!" (Only two people "liked" my status? Whatever. I'm positive the other 296 were just jealous.)

At times I panic when I realize I no longer have a steady paycheck, but then I remember that no job is worth sacrificing my happiness. I even wrote this note-to-self: "STOP GOING TO WORK! You are NOT ALLOWED to be in the office, check your work email or work on any more projects!"

I mean, the perks here are endless: I have never been this tan. I have never played with so many neighborhood dogs. I have never spent so much time roaming the aisles of Trader Joe's during the day. I have also come to believe daytime TV hosts are real friends of mine. ("I love Ellen and everything she does for animals. Did you know I recommended

GETTY IMAGES

"Fifty Shades of Grey" to her? For real!")

In the aftermath of my job loss, I can proudly say I make a great cheap date. Heyo! After eating overcooked pasta and stolen ketchup packets at home alone for days, enjoying a nice meal out with good company is awesome. I just need to remember to shower before heading out. (FYI, I am currently cramming in as many doctor visits as possible before my medical coverage ends. And I think I'm fine with the idea of a shotgun wedding with a stranger for his medical benefits. Just sayin'.)

I've considered becoming a human billboard, or dressing like the Statue of Liberty or a chicken, standing on a busy corner to attract clients for businesses. If there were a university nearby, I'd donate my body for science. (How much for my kidney? That's IT!!!!) And while panhandling with a black marker and cardboard may sound like a smart idea, the economic downfall has got me wondering: At what point can I begin asking for PayPal donations?

When my reality check bounced, I kinda laughed all the way. Just not to the bank. Yes, this could be the best time of my adult life.

& QUICK & DIRTY

We know. You've been busy. Need a quick recap of what you've missed in social media land lately? No problem. From a possible Facebook jobs board to an all-Gaga social network, you have a bit to catch up on.

Hatetweetstofrankocean.com

It's real, but it's not what you think. After R&B buzz guy Frank Ocean posted an intimate and emotional post on his Tumblr last week about falling in love with a man when he was 19, it seemed like the Internet collectively stood up to applaud. Well, not quite. The site features some of the hateful tweets directed at Ocean after he discussed his relationship, then gives you the option to send an auto-tweet to reply with some <3 to the Twitter user, with the text: "It is not who you love, it is that you love that truly matters."

Ladies rule

Duh. A report by marketing firm Digital Flash NY shows that women users are actively dominating two of the largest social networks: Twitter, at 64 percent, and Facebook, at 58 percent. And they're basically owning the game over at Pinterest, where they make up 82 percent of the user base.

Facebook job board?

Maybe it's a rumor. According to The Wall Street Journal, Facebook will be launching job listings, powered by third-party service providers. Think the LinkedIn folks should be shaking in their cubicles?

An all-Lady Gaga social network?

Yes, really. Lady Gaga's Pinterest-Tumblr-Facebook mashup website littlemonsters.com launched in beta form in February and just became available to all this week. Mega-fans can live chat, post photos, surf news, check out events and more, all about you guessed it, Gaga. And you know what? Besides the whole everything-is-Gaga-related thing, the site is really well done.

DEADLY OBSESSION

Eating disorders aren't just a female problem. Here's one man's story

Chicago Tribune

Rob hated to run. But he hated to stop even more.

That's when his inner voice, the one that had belittled him since the seventh grade, would speak. If he didn't keep going, it said, he was going to get fat.

So on he ran. And when even six hours a day of exercise weren't enough to quiet the voice, he started skipping meals, too.

While anorexia, bulimia and other eating disorders are potentially lethal disorders—up to 5 percent of those suffering from them die from suicide, substance abuse or medical issues—they traditionally have been viewed as women's problems: Researchers say only 10 percent of those who are treated for the conditions are male.

But a growing body of evidence suggests that number is misleading. A study published last year estimated that boys actually comprise 40 percent of teens who have eating disorders. An earlier Harvard survey found that men account for 25 percent of adults stricken by anorexia and bulimia.

Some Chicago-area therapists say more men and boys are seeking help. Niquie Dworin, who practices on the North Side, said they've been tormented by the same kind of unattainable body images that long have plagued women and girls.

"Action figures used to look normal," she said. "Now they're superhuman with really cut abs and really big shoulders."

Rob in 2009 at the peak of his exercise and eating issues. PHOTO PROVIDED

While eating disorders in both men and women appear to have similar roots in genetics, media messages, perfectionism and low self-esteem, the symptoms often are different. Experts say one big contrast is that men usually focus on muscularity, not thinness, and tend to manage their weight by working out to incredible extremes.

That's what happened with Rob, 24, from northwest suburban Elgin.

His trouble began at the age of 14, not long after bullying schoolmates mocked him for supposedly being fat. Vowing to gain the same kind of lean, athletic physique possessed by one of his tormentors, he started doing 100 push-ups a night. He then moved to the weight room, and when he entered high school, the cross country team.

By the time he was a senior, he made excuses to leave practice early so he could work out even harder alone.

"I wanted to make a name for myself, be something," he said recently. "Working harder than anyone else in the group made me better. That's what I thought."

Strange thing, though: Rob didn't care that much about winning races or setting records. He didn't really even like running. Thinking about the hours of exercise that awaited him after school filled him with dread.

But he absorbed the pain, and after noticing an odd relief in hunger, he began skipping meals, too. Mastering his body allowed him to feel as though he could manage a life that had become lonely and socially awkward.

Daniel Le Grange, director of the eating disorders program at the University of Chicago Medical Center, said it's common for people who suffer from the disorders to express a desire for control and self-affirmation. But any contentment that emerges from starvation and hellish exercise doesn't last long, he said.

"We have patients who are bleeding because they're on the carpet doing a thousand push ups and sit ups a day," he said. "It never gives you that feeling that you're yearning for, that you feel good about yourself."

Rob's intense exercise led to stress fractures, and he decided not to join the cross country team when he went to college in the fall of 2006. But he didn't let up on his body.

Instead, he rose at 6 a.m. for a quick breakfast before heading to the gym for a four-hour workout, including 90 minutes on an elliptical machine and an hour of weights. In the afternoon, after skipping lunch, he walked for

SAME PROBLEM, DIFFERENT OUTCOMES

Chicago Tribune

Dr. Ted Weltzin, medical director of eating disorder services at Rogers Memorial Hospital, said male eating disorders can go unrecognized for years for one simple reason: Few people expect to encounter one in a man.

"People aren't necessarily shocked that a woman has an eating disorder," he said. "There's a lot more confusion over a guy developing one. I think the awareness is pretty low."

While much remains unknown about how and why these disorders develop in men and boys, Weltzin said there are a few common risk factors:

MEN AND EATING DISORDERS

Men account for only a small minority of those treated for eating disorders, but recent research indicates that many more might actually suffer from the conditions. Researchers and therapists say men with eating disorders tend to focus on muscle definition rather than losing weight, and often will exercise excessively.

Of those with anorexia or bulimia, men account for:

of actual sufferers

10%
of those treated

COMMON EATING DISORDERS

Eating disorders are characterized by an unhealthy relationship with food and a distorted body image. Sufferers often have unrealistic self-critical thoughts about their weight.

Anorexia nervosa: Behavior includes severely restricting calories and frequently skipping meals.

Bulimia nervosa: Characterized by recurring episodes of binge eating followed by purging.

Binge eating disorder: Sufferers will eat large amounts of food very quickly to the point of feeling uncomfortable. The person feels he cannot control how much he eats.

SIGNS AND SYMPTOMS OF AN EATING DISORDER

- » Abnormal weight loss
- » Compulsive exercise
- » Constant fear of gaining weight
- » Difficulty concentrating and regulating moods
- » Depression or anxiety disorders
- » Painful burning in throat or chest
- » Low blood pressure; slow, irregular pulse
- » Stress fractures and broken bones more likely
- » Low energy or fatigue
- » Cold intolerance
- » Thinning hair

two hours before doing repeats on the library steps. He picked at his dinner before rewarding himself for his suffering with a giant piece of pie.

When Rob healed enough to run, his routines grew ever more punishing, his body ever lighter—sometimes dipping below 100 pounds on his 5-foot-7 frame.

In November, Rob sustained another leg fracture, the result of what doctors said was a lack of calcium in his bones. Though he was ordered to rest for a month, he became so frenzied from inactivity that he grabbed his crutches and did hobbled laps around his parents' kitchen table.

It turned out to be his moment of clarity. He called the eating disorders recovery center at Alexian Brothers Behavioral Health Hospital in Hoffman Estates and had himself admitted.

In his three months at Rogers, Rob said, he learned to take a more realistic view of himself and gain more control over his eating and exercise habits.

For now, though, he has managed to quiet the voice inside him with the mantra he took away from treatment: He is more than his body.

"There are so many other things that set me aside," he said. "I have my goals and aspirations, like wanting to be a counselor. What I do physically will not be the defining characteristic for me."

» Males tend to focus on muscle definition rather than losing weight. "We're seeing an evolution as to how men are portrayed in print and magazines," Weltzin said. "It's going down the same tired path as what happens with women, but it's an overvaluing of muscularity."
» Men with eating disorders are more likely than women to have been overweight in the past, and are more likely to have suffered "weight-based victimization" in their childhoods.

» Eating disorders are significantly higher among gay males than heterosexual ones.

The reasons for that aren't clear, but Weltzin said it might be related to the emotional stress of growing up gay or how body image is valued in the gay community.

» Athletes who participate in sports in which body weight is a major factor—including everything from wrestling to high-jumping—can be susceptible to eating disorders.

Mayor's plan: 'We'll check for criminal background, but not for immigration'

Chicago Tribune

Mayor Emanuel wants to put a long standing Chicago practice on the books to ensure that police detain only undocumented immigrants who are suspected or convicted criminals.

The symbolic ordinance Emanuel proposed Tuesday would allow city police to turn over to federal agents undocumented immigrants who are wanted on a criminal warrant or who have been convicted of a serious crime, but not others.

Chicago has practiced a sanctuary city policy dating back to Mayor Harold Washington's tenure during the 1980s. City agencies have been prohibited from inquiring about the immigration status of people requesting services. The Chicago Police Department also refrains from questioning victims of crime, witnesses or other law-abiding residents about their legal status.

Police, however, do run background checks on people suspected of committing crimes. In recent years, if officers found a deportation order, the U.S. Immigration and Customs Enforcement expected police to turn over undocumented immigrants. But the city had no specific requirement about how to act in those cases, and the policy was inconsistently enforced, according to Adolfo Hernandez, the director of the Mayor's Office of New Americans.

The police department does not exist to serve as an "adjunct for the immigration service," Emanuel said.

"We're not going to turn people over to ICE and we're not going to check their immigration status. We'll check for criminal background, but not for immigration status," Emanuel said at a news conference at Little Village High School.

Officials with the federal immigration agency could not be reached for comment.

The announcement gave Emanuel the opportunity to steer the conversation away from Chicago's rising violent crime rate, at least for a day. Emanuel's stance puts Chicago in sharp contrast to states such as Arizona and South Carolina, where police are required to check the immigration status of people they stop.

Standing by the mayor's side was U.S. Rep. Luis Guterrez, who has been at odds with Emanuel on immigration issues. Guterrez, who considered running in last year's mayoral contest, has said that as chief of staff for President Obama, Emanuel obstructed comprehensive immigration reform because it would hurt Democrats at the polls.

While the issue separated the two in the past, it was the thing that united them Tuesday, Guterrez said.

"This isn't a question of cuddling up to criminals. We detest, hate and want ourselves rid of criminals," Guterrez said. "If you're a drug dealer, if you're a gang member, if you're a murderer or rapist, if you're a bad person I want the immigration system to rid you of our society as quickly as efficiently, fast, yesterday. I want you gone."

Viacom on chopping block

DirecTV subscribers may lose popular channels owned by Viacom Inc. including MTV, Comedy Central and Nickelodeon as early as Wednesday if the two companies are unable to come to terms on a new distribution deal.

Viacom said on its website that its current contract with DirecTV expires at midnight Tuesday and no agreement is near.

"Despite our best efforts, DirecTV has rejected all of our proposals to renew our agreement," Viacom said, adding that the latest offer from the satellite broadcaster is for a lower rate than Viacom said it gets from any other distributor in the industry.

DirecTV, which has about 20 million subscribers around the country, countered that Viacom is being greedy. Viacom wants a 30 percent increase, or an additional $1 billion, to carry its channels, DirecTV said in a statement.

Although the pact was set to expire at midnight, DirecTV said it is willing to continue carrying the channels while the two sides negotiate a new deal, but Viacom has resisted that offer.

Fights over new agreements between programmers and distributors are commonplace in the industry. Typically, a deal is reached without viewers losing service, but it does happen on occasion. Satellite broadcaster Dish Network, for example, recently stopped carrying AMC and its sister channels as part of a dispute.

Besides Comedy Central, MTV and Nickelodeon, other Viacom channels include Spike, VH1 and TV Land.

While negotiations appear stalled, later this week Viacom Chief Executive Philippe Dauman and DirecTV chief Mike White will both be at the Allen & Co. conference in Sun Valley, Idaho, so maybe they can get some alone time to hammer out a new deal.

Alaskan baby beluga dies

7 Alaska's most famous baby beluga whale has died.

Two Alaska fishermen had discovered the baby beluga dehydrated and disoriented in a shallow area of Bristol Bay on June 18. That led to a frantic rescue by the Alaska SeaLife Center, which grounded local flights while it airlifted the beluga calf to the center.

An employee with the center confirmed the death to the Los Angeles Times on Monday, but officials at the center were not immediately available for further comment. According a report from the Anchorage Daily News, the calf died around midnight Sunday. The cause was not immediately known, and a necropsy was scheduled.

"They were actually surprised that ... we were able to keep the calf going so well for so long," Tara Riemer Jones, president of the Alaska SeaLife Center, told the Anchorage Daily News. "This was way beyond the expectations for that team."

BULLS OFTEN COME HOME AGAIN—WITH MIXED RESULTS

By Jack M Silverstein | FOR REDEYE

The Bulls' history of second stints has run the gamut. For every unquestionable success like Michael Jordan's return, there's one as forgettable as B.J. Armstrong's. Kirk Hinrich hopes to leave another lasting impression with the Bulls, as he's expected to sign with the team Wednesday. Here's how other players have fared in their second go-round with the Bulls. JACK M SILVERSTEIN IS A REDEYE SPECIAL CONTRIBUTOR.

Michael Jordan

First stint: 1985-93 Second stint: 1995-98

When word ripped 'round the league that Jordan was retiring from baseball, excitement was through the United Center roof. But neither fans nor the media knew how good he'd be after a year and a half away from the hardwood. However, a game-winner in his fourth game and a 55-point masterpiece in his fifth put the league on notice. Before long, we knew "I'm back" was an understatement.

Scottie Pippen

First stint: 1987-98 Second stint: 2003-04

The Bulls entered 2002-03 so downtrodden that the team made its season slogan "Through Thick and Thin." Incredibly, the Jalen Rose-led Bulls won 30 games, leading to the re-signing of Scottie Pippen (then 38) who was asked to be the team's steadying influence in their rise to the playoffs. Sidelined by injury, Pippen lasted 23 underwhelming games, the team churned through three coaches and 18 starters (18!), and Scottie rolled into retirement with his lone non-playoff season.

Brad Miller

First stint: 2000-02 Second stint: 2009-10

After seven successful seasons with Indiana and Sacramento, Miller returned to the Bulls for the final 27 games of 2009-10 and was terrific, averaging about 10 points and eight boards through the end of the playoff run against Boston. Though this time around he was best remembered for missing two free throws to end Game 5 while in a daze from Rajon Rondo's intentional/unintentional face scrape.

Will Perdue & B.J. Armstrong

First stints: 1988-95 and 1989-95, respectively

Second stint: 1999-00

Much of Bulls history from 1999-2004 is filled with forgettable moments that only die-hards even experienced, let alone remember. Attempts to relay these tales to current Bulls fans often go like this: "Wait, wait, B.J. Armstrong came back to the Bulls in 1999-2000? And he wore No. 11? What? Will Perdue came back too? Come on, I definitely would have heard about that."

Charles Oakley

First stint: 1985-88

Second stint: 2001-02

So the thinking here was that after a terrific career in New York and a few good seasons in Toronto, Oakley (then 38) would come to the "Baby Bulls" and mentor rookies Tyson Chandler and Eddy Curry as well as troubled forward Ron Artest while providing stability for a team coached by Tim Floyd. Instead, Oakley struggled on the worst team of his career, failed to guide Chandler or Curry or save Artest or Floyd and helped provoke Shaquille O'Neal's near-beheading punch of Brad Miller.

Brewer, Watson on their way out

Rumored for weeks as the most expendable of the Bulls' so-called Bench Mob, Ronnie Brewer confirmed Tuesday that management won't pick up his $4.37 million team option for 2012-13. The Bulls already had informed C.J. Watson's camp that his $3.2 million option for next season won't be picked up after receiving a verbal commitment from Kirk Hinrich. Hinrich is expected to sign a two-year, $6 million deal Wednesday.

1 Make a prediction for the second half of the baseball season.

The Cubs. I'm sorry, did you say, "the second laugh of the baseball season"?

Sox go on a tear and wrap up the AL Central by Labor Day. Boomshakalaka!

The Cubs will continue to be not very good at baseball.

Hype overtakes the Cubs as they change their team name to the Wrigleyville Rizzos.

Despite hitting .000, Bud Selig will make more money than Alejandro De Aza and Anthony Rizzo combined.

2 What's the best way to decide home-field advantage in the World Series?

Duck, duck, juice.

Hell in a Cell, duh. That's how I picked my last apartment.

Two words: sumo wrestling.

Prince Fielder vs. Pablo Sandoval in a Nathan's hot dog eat-off. All beef!

By doing the opposite of whatever MLB wants to do.

3 A USA basketball team without Derrick Rose is like ...

... unbearable without Pooh.

... me at a Sox game without a beer. Fun, yes, but it's just not RIGHT.

... a Chicago basketball team without Derrick Rose. Not very much fun.

... the 2012 All-Star game without A.J. Pierzynski.

... the Bulls without Derrick Rose, except Team USA will probably still win.

4 Why has it been so difficult to trade Dwight Howard?

Superman is faster than a speeding bullet. He can't be caught by Nets.

$$$ Those weird arm sleeve things don't grow on trees, you know.

I heard he smells like a foot.

Because the self-proclaimed Superman thinks anywhere other than Metropolis is kryptonite.

Because even in the NBA he seems like kind of a high-maintenance jerk, which is saying a lot.

5 Why was Reggie Jackson barred from the N.Y. Yankees?

It was A-Rodical decision.

Did he not sing "Rock Me Tonight" or something? Wait, that's FREDDIE Jackson.

He ate a bunch of wings and wiped his hands all over Steinbrenner.

The "Reggie Bar" occurred because the Yankees already are packed with nuts.

Please see above but replace "in the NBA" with "on the Yankees."

Alfonso Soriano and the Cubs can expect fewer at-bats against the White Sox moving forward.

US PRESSWIRE

MLB dials down Sox-Cubs heat

The City Series will be reduced from six to four games between the Cubs and White Sox in most seasons, union leader Michael Weiner said.

Commissioner Bud Selig declined to discuss specifics of the schedule being finalized for baseball's first season with 15 teams in each league. But Weiner told members of the Baseball Writers Association of America on Tuesday that "traditional rival" series like Cubs-Sox will go from six games a year to four in most seasons.

Weiner suggested that it is likely those four games will be broken up into two-game series at each park.

There still could be six Cubs-White Sox games once every three years. Weiner said interleague play will rotate between divisions, with teams playing the five-team divisions in their opposite league every three years, and will comprise six series a year, the extra series being one with a so-called "traditional rival." In years that the two Central divisions play, the Cubs and Sox could play two three-game series, one at each park.

Does less equal more?

Fire get starry-eyed

In the vein of the White Sox's #TakeJake campaign for Jake Peavy, the Fire launched a #PickPat push to send Patrick Nyarko to the 2012 MLS All-Star Game in Philadelphia on July 25. The soccer team backs up its argument with this video: bit.ly/nyarko. Stay tuned on whether the league opts to involve fan voting, like baseball does.

STAYING DIVERSIFIED

Outer Minds samples 'a lot of cookie jars' while adding shagginess to the Pitchfork Fest

CHI-TUNES

Andy Downing

» metromix@tribune.com
» @redeyechicagomusic

The Pitchfork Music Festival frequently books forward-thinking acts, but at least one band on this weekend's bill has a sound firmly rooted in the past.

Performing Friday, Chicago's Outer Minds come across like a throwback to 1960s psychedelic rock, though anyone who likes rock 'n' roll loud, fast and dirty will appreciate the band's raucous sound. Reached at home in Logan Square, singer/guitarist Zach Medearis, 32, opened up about the artist he'd like to collaborate with at Pitchfork, why you'll never see Outer Minds jamming with an orchestra and his (bloody) political aspirations.

Who are you most looking forward to seeing at Pitchfork this year?

I always like seeing Ty Segall and Thee Oh Sees, but I've seen them a bunch and I kind of want to see A$AP Rocky. I bartend in a place that plays a lot of hip-hop, so I hear him a lot and I read a couple interviews with him and he's a hilarious guy. He might say and do a couple strange things, so I'd like to see that firsthand.

If you could collaborate with one act at the fest who would it be?

Let's just go A$AP Rocky and have the two weirdos get together.

What song would you attempt?

I don't even know. Maybe we'd just try and do some freestyle. That's a hard question. Collaborations are weird just 'cause it would be very obvious for me to say a band that's in the same genre as us, but it's also tricky to say a band that's in an opposite genre. It's a tough thing to conceptualize in my brain.

When: 3:20 p.m. Friday

Where: Pitchfork Music Festival, Union Park

Tickets: $45 per day

Listen at redeyechicago.com: "Until You're Dead"

Your bio notes you've "gone through more names and roster changes than most."

It's not that crazy. Me and the bass player are the very, very original members of this, and we kind of filtered through different people that had a varying interest in touring.

So you're not a difficult person to get along with then?

Oh, I'm sure I'm a difficult person to get along with, so I'm not saying that. When you have something you care a lot about and an idea you really want to see through, I don't think it's a bad thing to do what you have to do to make it happen.

You've also put out singles and albums on a variety of labels. Is it possible there's really just some kind of commitment issue?

No. Each record label has a very strong base that follows that particular label. We did Ho-Zac, which is a friend of mine's label here in Chicago. Then Southpaw put out our LP and they're on the West Coast. Push My Buttons is out of Sweden. It's just putting records out in different geographies.

Kind of the way someone might diversify their stock portfolio.

You put your fingers in a lot of cookie jars and hope one of 'em has something you want.

I was surprised to read you have a master's degree in classical composition. Do you still listen to a lot of classical?

I do here and there. It's good background music for me. I don't sit and try and tear it apart as much as I used to.

Is there any chance you'd ever record alongside an orchestra with Outer Minds?

ZACH MEDEARIS PERSONALITY TEST

What's the last album you bought?

The last album I bought was probably a Teenage Moods record. It's this band out of Minneapolis.

Song you've listened to on repeat recently?

Thee Oh Sees' new song, "Lupine Dominus."

Song you never want to hear again?

Anything on the radio.

Best concert you've seen in the last year?

Roky Erickson at the Blackout Fest. Human Eye opened for him, and they just slayed it, too.

Favorite movie ever?

My favorite movie ever is probably "Cabin Boy" with Chris Elliott.

Chicago's best music venue?

Empty Bottle by far.

I think classical music should be left as it is. I think mixing rock 'n' roll and classical is kind of a boner move.

So you won't be pulling a Yngwie Malmsteen and performing alongside the Japanese Philharmonic Orchestra any time soon then?

No, let's get it straight, we're a psych-rock band and we like to play kind of hard and loose and loud. When it comes to classical you can't really play like that because you've got too many people you're affecting.

I've read you have an interest in politics. If you're elected mayor of Chicago, what's your first order of business?

The system is so broken we need to start the whole thing over again. Everyone that's in politics needs to be kicked out. It's almost guilt by association at this point.

So if you're in office it's likely the end result of a violent coup and not an election. That's what I'd prefer.

If that's the case do you continue making music on the side?

I imagine being a strong-armed dictator probably takes up a lot of your time, but I'd still make music. I've been playing music since I was 4 years old, and I don't imagine I would stop.

'Confess' looks to the '80s

By Kyle Kramer

FOR REDEYE

While many of its contemporaries in '80s new wave nostalgia drowned their music and accompanying emotions in electronic filters, Twin Shadow's 2010 debut "Forget" embraced the era's tradition of moody music on its own terms. George

Lewis Jr., Twin Shadow's creative force, delivered sharp production and musicianship that recalled actual period bands rather than merely leaning on the '80s shorthand of Human League-style synth effects.

For a breakup album, however, "Forget" could have the effect of leaving its listeners more impressed than moved. Twin Shadow's sophomore album "Confess," despite lyrics that focus on a less inspiring brand of petty emotions associated with some undefined modern relationships, is stirring, sing-along, fist-pump stuff end-to-end.

This record again looks to the '80s for a blueprint, embracing not just the sound but also the spirit of an era when rock music was chart-topping pop material. That's reiterated in the album cover, which shows Lewis posed alone in a leather jacket—a sort of bad boy pop star image that seems oddly anachronistic at a time when rock has become so generally self-effacing.

Indie rock bands don't brand themselves this way; Bruce Springsteen does. And that's the point: While the music on "Confess" still draws heavily from bands like The Psychedelic Furs, it's really reaching for the territory of arena-friendly artists like U2 and Bruce Springsteen.

In another era, songs like "Five Seconds" or "Beg For The Night," with its killer guitar coda, could have been the kind of massive, unifying anthems that totally crush at karaoke.

'Magellan' finds a tender groove

By Kyle Kramer

FOR REDEYE

Dirty Projectors songs don't generally work like regular songs. They clatter, contradict and undermine themselves. They are full of syncopation. They abruptly veer away from their own melodies. They bounce between fragmented sonic elements. Listening to Dirty Projectors (whose last proper studio record was 2009's fascinating "Bitte Orca") can be a delicate undertaking: It seems like the songs could collapse at any moment.

While their music scans as Brooklyn indie rock, the band's experimentalist bent is probably more in line with an act like R&B singer The-Dream, who, armed with a strong technical mastery of craft, is interested in

ALBUM REVIEW

Swing Lo Magellan
Dirty Projectors

figuring out the tiny elements that make songs work. Dirty Projectors deal as much in compelling moments—for instance, the sudden, guitar-driven choruses on "Swing Lo Magellan" opener and highlight "Offspring Are Blank"—as they do in cohesive songs.

"Swing Lo Magellan" does cohere, though, despite its self-consciousness, echoing both the progressive attitudes and well-worn sounds of artists like David Bowie, late Beatles and, at times, Bob Dylan. The album is often quieter, more lyrically tender, and more straightforward in its songwriting than the band's previous work, particularly on standout tracks "Dance For You" and "The Socialites."

Driven by both their companionable lyrical approach to complicated feelings and stirring instrumental flourishes, the Dirty Projectors songs on "Swing Lo Magellan" play this guiding role and, as a result, very much work like regular songs.

Drew Roy finds romance on 'Falling Skies'

SHOW PATROL

Curt Wagner

 @cwagner@tribune.com
 @showpatrol

Drew Roy can't complain about playing teen-turned-alien fighter Hal Mason in "Falling Skies." Despite a constant alien threat, Hal seems to find time for romance.

"I'll agree with you there," Roy said, laughing. "You know, being Hal, they throw a new girl at you about every other week. It's great."

The 26-year-old Alabama native exaggerated just a bit during our phone interview before the TNT hit's second season began. But in the most recent episode, "Love and Other Acts of Courage," Hal did seize an opportunity to make out with his fellow scout, Maggie (Sarah Carter). Now the couple has to figure out what's next, including whether they even are a couple.

Hal's former love, Karen (Jessy Schram), now under the control of the aliens, comes back into the picture in "Homecoming," airing at 8 p.m. July 15. Karen's return will be yet another obstacle in the way of Hal's relationship with Maggie.

"I don't think he'll ever be able to completely forget about Karen," Roy said. "I think he still has a little flicker of hope that some day they can ... de-harness her and all will be well."

Roy had more than a flicker of hope that he could become an actor when he moved from Alabama to Hollywood just out of high school. Roy had never participated in drama classes at Chilton County High School in Clanton, Ala., but after meeting a modeling agent in Atlanta, decided he would make acting his career.

"I [couldn't] even call myself an actor, because I'd never been on stage before. I'd never acted in front of a camera," he said with a chuckle. "A little naivete goes a long way. If I'd have known what I was getting into, I'd have never come."

Roy got a valet job at the Beverly Hills Hotel, parking the cars of famous patrons while auditioning for TV and movie roles. He and five friends who were in a band shared two one-bedroom apartments.

His friends moved home after two years, but Roy stayed, even though that flicker of hope he'd ever become an actor was fading. He worked five years as a valet before finally landing a guest role on "Greek." He followed that up with guest spots on "Lincoln Heights" and "iCarly," which in turn led to him playing Miley Cyrus' boyfriend on "Hannah Montana" and a big-screen role in "Secretariat."

"Falling Skies" came next, and he was cast as Hal Mason, a role he humbly suggests he got because "the people that they originally wanted couldn't do it."

He didn't have any special interest in doing a sci-fi series, he said.

"To be absolutely honest with you, when I booked this thing I was just interested in a job," he added, laughing. "The fact that the job was as cool as it was with such great people, I was like, 'Oh heck yeah! I hit the lottery.' So I'd like to say, 'I had 19 scripts and this was my favorite one.' No, I just got lucky."

TAKE IT OFF!

ANNUAL WINDY CITY BURLESQUE FEST SHAKES IT UP A BIT

By Julia Borcherts

FOR REDEYE

So, you're asking, where can you go to make these hot nights even hotter? Our suggestion: Head to the third annual Windy City Burlesque Fest, where more than 90 female and male artists—including 60 from across the country and around the world—burn up the stage over the course of three nights. The fireworks begin Thursday with a free kick-off party at Lincoln Tap Room, followed by six main events at Stage 773, each showcasing one of three headlining burlesque queens and two of seven featured acts along with full lineups of performers, plus dozens of workshops with the artists so you can learn some new moves yourself.

The inaugural strip-stravaganza debuted in 2010 when Vaudezilla's Red Hot Annie teamed up with Belmont Burlesque Revue's Paris Green. "We were primarily inspired by all of the amazing local talent that has blossomed in Chicago in the past three to four years," says Annie. "We wanted to showcase their talent, as well as inspire everyone by bringing in some of our favorite national and international burlesque performers."

This year, the fest moves to the newly renovated Stage 773, "where we can feature aerial burlesque acts for the first time," Annie continues. "We'll [also] have vendors for the first time, so people will be able to purchase their own burlesque goodies. This is also the first year that we'll have a legend—Tiffany Carter, who was a very in-demand performer from the 1960s to 1980s and will be making a special appearance (yes, she'll be performing!)—at the festival."

Can't decide which shows to attend? While each showcase features 14-18 different performers, we've highlighted the headlining and featured acts for each to help you decide.

THURSDAY

9 p.m.

(Free kick-off party at Lincoln Tap Room, 3010 N. Lincoln Ave.) Chicagoan Shirley Knot hosts performances by a dozen local favorites—including Cruel Valentine, Lucy Flawless and Josephine Shaker—plus Patsy Blue Ribbon from Indianapolis and Miss Alyssa Kitt from Brisbane, Australia.

FRIDAY

8 p.m.

Coco Letric—a classically trained dancer with a Bettie Page look—arrives from Austin, Texas with her modern nod to classic burlesque (think feather fans). She's joined by Tiffany Carter, a burlesque legend from Las Vegas, and Penny Starr Jr. from L.A.

10 p.m.

Expect contortion when Hollywood dynamo Kristina Nekyia steps onto the stage—she's one of a very few burlesque performers with a legitimate circus background and she's also known for fire-eating and bellydancing. Fellow Angeleno Kitten DeVille and Chicago's own Bazuka Joe round out the "featured" spots.

Midnight

Jo Boobs—the fest's first headliner from New York City and one of the world's most recognized burlesque instructors—made her name with an act where she dressed as Godzilla, so you know she'll bring something edgy, likely set to modern music. Foxy Tann from Minneapolis and local boylesque hottie Ray Gunn are also featured.

SATURDAY

8 p.m.

Jo Boobs headlines again, this time with Kitten DeVille—a shimmy-shaker who brings a lot of sex appeal to her acts and is one of this era's most well-known neo-burlesque performers—and Penny Starr Jr.

10 p.m.

Coco Letric classes up the joint again tonight, along with the hunky Jeff Adore from Chicago and Tiffany Carter, who headlined around the world from the '60s through the '80s and was crowned Miss Nude Universe 1975.

Midnight

Kristina Nekyia brings her hips of fury back onstage for more fiery moves. Female female-impersonator Foxy Tann—you know, like "Victor/Victoria," but a whole lot campier and edgier—takes the stage, too, along with Chitown boys-next-door-but-better troupe, The Stagedoor Johnnies.

FOOD QUEST

LOCATION: BELMONT & BROADWAY

By Kate Bernot | REDEYE

With high temperatures in store for another few months, it's time to get serious about which frozen dessert you're going to pledge allegiance to this summer. Are you an old-school ice cream fan? Or do you prefer a smoother, creamier gelato? What about a tricked-out frozen custard blended with a handful of toppings? If you're still on the fence, a ride from west to east along Belmont Avenue (hop on and off the No. 77 bus) provides all the taste-testing you need to come to an informed decision. KBERNOT@TRIBUNE.COM | @KBERNOT

IT'S TASTE TIME!

The Fourth of July has come and gone, but this year's Taste of Chicago starts Wednesday and runs through Sunday. New this year, a booth located just south of Jackson Boulevard on the east side of Columbus Drive will feature a rotating roster of pop-up restaurants that change daily. Highlights include Jin Ju, Inspiration Kitchen, LM and Karyn's on Green. See the full pop-up schedule at explorechicago.org.

Jessie Oloroso
TRIBUNE FILE PHOTOS

1. First: Black Dog Gelato

1955 W. Belmont Ave. 773-348-7935

Expert gelato maker Jessie Oloroso's Ukrainian Village outpost of Black Dog was so popular, she had to open a second location in Roscoe Village practically just to keep up with demand. She's still serving favorite flavors such as whiskey and goat cheese-cashew-caramel, along with other creative combinations that change daily ($3.50 for a small; $4.75 for a large).

2. Next: Scooter's Frozen Custard

1658 W. Belmont Ave. 773-244-6415

This mom-and-pop corner shop has become a Lakeview staple thanks mainly to its "concretes," a blend of frozen custard, toppings and syrups that really appeal to the inner child ($3.99 for a small; $5.19 for a regular).

3. Last: Bobtail Ice Cream Company

2951 N. Broadway 773-880-7372

Though it's only been open since 2004, Bobtail feels like it's been a part of East Lakeview for decades, with its old-fashioned soda fountain vibe and loyal neighborhood customers. Build your own sundae or choose from one of the shop's creations such as Big Oreo or S'more ($6.25 for a double-scoop sundae).

What's new for the Taste?

Chicago Tribune

You can't get a giant turkey leg or a free front-row concert seat, but there may be more room for you to sit and enjoy your salad or slider at this year's Taste of Chicago, which starts Wednesday in Grant Park. With almost 20 fewer food vendors and a time slot that doesn't lead up to the Fourth of July, this year's festival is expected to be roomier as well as shorter. Here's a look at some of the changes.

FREE FOOD?!

If your money runs out before your appetite at the Taste of Chicago on Wednesday, then you might be in luck—if you like the taste of Asian carp, that is. Starting at noon Wednesday, the Illinois Department of Natural Resources will serve up free samples of the invasive species to willing takers in order to help them learn about efforts to protect the Great Lakes.

Jeremy McGrath's Off Road

Xbox 360, PlayStation 3

!!! The old cliché "You get what you pay for" rings true for this new downloadable off-road racing game, but that's not necessarily a terrible thing. On one hand, "Jeremy McGrath's Off Road" certainly lacks the depth and the polish of its gaming brethren, the recently released "DiRT Showdown" (it's especially odd that vehicles treading through mud stay virtually spotless). But for budget-savvy gamers "Off Road" costs a fraction of that game and packs 23 different racing events and a lot of fast arcade action for its $10 asking price.

THREE TO PLAY

BY RYAN SMITH | FOR REDEYE

Spec Ops: The Line

Xbox 360, PlayStation 3, PC

!!! There are plenty of interesting ideas in "Spec

Ops: The Line," but they only illustrate the limits of the kind of story you can tell in a video game where your primary objective is killing lots of people. The narrative takes place in a war-torn Dubai and it involves a U.S. military unit that has lost its way in more ways than one and is a not-so-subtle modern homage to the classic Vietnam movie "Apocalypse Now" and its source material (the Joseph Conrad novel "Heart of Darkness"). The high quality graphics and competent action don't quite make up for the cognitive dissonance between action and story.

Corn Quest iOS

!!! If you assumed that every possible person, animal or inanimate object already has been turned into a video game character—think again. Like its title suggests, "Corn Quest" grants you control of anthropomorphic kernels of corn who must fend off nests of pesty ants threatening to eat the whole crop. Everything from the cartoonish graphics to the basic tower-defense gameplay of "Corn Quest" resemble "Plants Vs. Zombies" but its about half as strategic and entertaining. Worst of all is the embrace of the Pay-to-Win brand of gaming in which you're asked to spend real-life money on special items like "Shuck Norris" to ease your way through tough levels. It's an idea that's—excuse the pun—quite corny.

FINN HUDSON AND ARCHIE ANDREWS
Both are jocks, both are clumsy and both attract an inexplicable number of ladies. We're actually a little terrified of the rivalry that might develop between these two when they meet in comic-book land.

WHAT ABOUT KURT HUMMEL?
Everyone's favorite gay high-school style icon wasn't included here, but you can meet Chris Colfer, the actor who plays him, in real life. He'll be at Macy's on State Street at 1 p.m. July 21 signing copies of his new book, "The Land of Stories: The Wishing Spell."

RACHEL BERRY AND BETTY COOPER
We initially paired Rachel with the raven-haired Veronica, but quickly realized the error of our ways. Even though Betty is way less neurotic, both initially are the backup choice of the main man. They could trade fashion tips about clamdigger jeans on the weekend while spying on guys from the bushes.

QUINN FABRAY AND VERONICA LODGE
We thought rich, snooty Veronica was the most manipulative chick in high-school history, but Quinn's pregnancy scandal blows her out of the water. After all, Veronica never tricked Archie into thinking she was knocked up with his baby when it was really REGGIE the whole time.

NOAH "PUCK" PUCKERMAN AND REGGIE MANTLE
The pre-eminent bad boys of their schools. Puck and Reggie either would butt heads, or set elaborate booby traps to take over the whole school. Hopefully Reggie doesn't learn too much from Puck about knocking up cheerleaders/hooks up with teachers.

SANTANA LOPEZ AND CHERYL BLOSSOM
Boys love them. Girls hate them. Santana and Cheryl are the sneak-attack outliers, those chicks you don't quite trust around your boyfriend—and for good reason. Although apparently Cheryl was banned from "Archie"-world for a while, so she might win in a catfight.

BRITTANY S. PIERCE AND JUGHEAD JONES
Every group of friends needs a resident bonehead, right? Both Brittany and Jughead mean well, but they also come up with some of the best unintentional one-liners. They also seem to share a propensity toward wacky hats.

SCHOOL TIES

What happens when the 'Glee' and Archie comics worlds collide?

By Dana Moran REDEYE

School may be out for the summer, but that doesn't stop our fictional high school friends from getting busy. Archie Comics on Monday revealed a planned collaboration with the "Glee" cast of characters for an "Archie Meets Glee" comic book, due our next year. The news got us thinking about the disturbing number of parallels between the two fictional universes. Let's pair up our favorites from each series, shall we?

The most talked-about musical performance Tuesday came from a singer whose new album doesn't officially drop until next week. Odd Future affiliate Frank Ocean, who last week went public with the story of the first time he fell in love with a man, brought down the house Monday on "Late Night with Jimmy Fallon" with his performance of "Bad Religion," backed by The Roots and an orchestra. For the record, "Channel Orange" drops July 17, but is available for download on iTunes and free streaming at frankocean.com right now.

NOT 'BAD'

The Suri sitch

Because the day just doesn't feel right without a TomKat update, we bring you this: In the wake of Tom Cruise and Katie Holmes' divorce settlement, announced Monday, Cruise flew to California's High Sierra to resume filming the sci-fi flick "Oblivion." Meanwhile, the couple's daughter, Suri, likely will live primarily with Holmes in New York, people.com reported. Now don't you feel better?

Not the Regis

Seth Meyers wants to set the record straight: He is not replacing Regis Philbin on "Live!" "No, no, no, no, no," Meyers told the Sun Sentinel newspaper.

"... I'm really in love with the job I have. I'm very excited to be going back [to 'Saturday Night Live'] for the election season, which is always fun." Somewhere, Stefon breathes a sigh of relief.

Hey, me just met you
And this is crazy
You got cookies
So share it maybe!

— Cookie Monster, giving his own spin to Carly Rae Jepsen's hit "Call Me Maybe" in a video posted to YouTube on Tuesday.

THE DIGIT

2 That's how many movies will be made of "Mockingjay," the final book in the "Hunger Games" trilogy, ew.com reports. They are scheduled for release in 2014 and 2015.

“Nothing says comedy like breaking down.”

— Kristen Wiig, to Marie Claire, on battling her emotions to get through her sketches on her final episode of "Saturday Night Live"
